Marriages might come to an end
But…
The role of a parent in the life of a child is forever!

Families may need help in addressing issues that arise out of this emotional and confusing time.

There is a place for families to find guidance through this transition:

Service Referral and Coordination Center

What is the Service Referral and Coordination Center?

The Service Referral and Coordination Center is a resource that will assist your family in finding services that will benefit you during the transition period of divorce. The Center will help connect your family with resources and other supports available in your community.

Why have I been ordered to the Center?

Your family has been selected because the Judge hearing your family's case believes that you will benefit from additional outside services. Your Judge values your family and has determined that referrals to appropriate services will lead to healthier relationships.

Do I have to participate?

You have been court ordered to the Center; therefore, you must participate. However, it is our belief that through your participation in this process, you and your family will be given necessary tools to deal with your issues and make creative solutions. As a final benefit, dealing with your issues now may keep you from having to return to the court later with more serious problems.

How will the Center help?

The Center is going to help you identify your family's problem areas and assist you in finding available, affordable services. The Center will make the appointments and make sure that you are equipped to attend your services. To facilitate your attendance, the Coordinator will check for insurance acceptance, find service providers as close to your home as possible, get directions and contact information for you from each provider, and create a calendar of everything that is scheduled for you.

What do I have to do?

Based on the Judge's order, you will complete the assessment process with the Coordinator at the Center. Then you and the Coordinator will work together to find appropriate service providers that are specific to your needs. An initial appointment will be scheduled with or for you while you are at the Center. After you have completed the assessment and facilitation, it becomes your responsibility to attend any appointments and to complete any services that the service providers deem appropriate.

How much will it cost?

The courts donate the assessment and facilitation provided by the Service Referral and Coordination Center to you, with the assistance of the Efroymson Family Foundation.

There may be costs associated with the services rendered by providers; those costs will be your responsibility. The Center will make every effort to find providers who have assistance programs for families who need them.
